

Unrated.

The beauty brand that refuses to score women,
and gives every woman a way to refuse it too.

TEEN SELFIE POST

~~rate me 1-10? be honest~~

COMMENT SECTION

~~She's a 6. An 8 with makeup.~~

AI FACE-RATING FILTER

~~Your beauty score: 6.4~~

MATRIMONIAL AD, INDIA

~~Wanted: fair, slim, homely~~

DATING PODCAST

~~Is she high value?~~

SAID TO WOMEN OVER 40

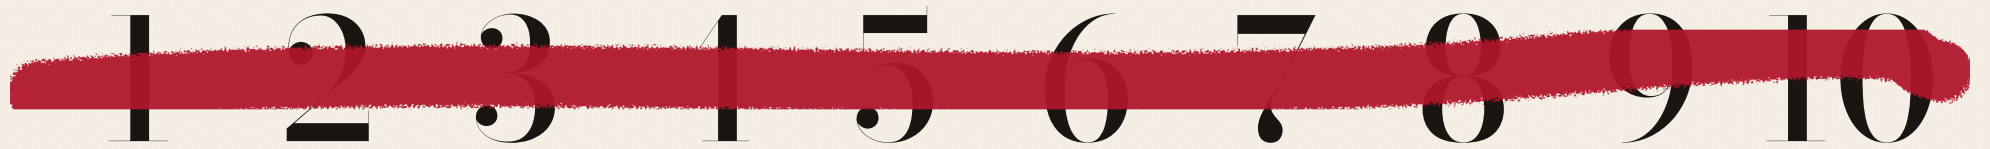

~~Not bad for your age.~~

Scored everywhere.

Beauty brands tell women they're beautiful. None help them deal
with being scored.

And because the beauty industry helped create these scores, a beauty brand refusing them would mean something.

L'ORÉAL PARIS · 2026

Unrated.

A filter, ads and a public stand that cross out the scores women are given.

1

Show it

Teaser ads show only scores, "6.4", "7/10", so people notice how normal rating women has become.

2

Cross it out

The Unrated AR filter crosses every score out in lipstick red. Women use it to answer their own "rate me" posts.

3

Change it

An open letter asks apps to stop scoring teenagers, signed by the brand and by women everywhere.

1971

A woman decides her own value. The enemy: men in a boardroom.

2026

Same fight. The enemy now: a number in a comment section.

Shade No. —

A limited-edition red with no number on the tube. The one shade in the range that refuses a score. Proceeds fund work against online harassment.

Akshara Singh · brand audit, research, strategy, idea, social plan, copy & design